

Slabs at different levels

The image shows a 3D perspective of a building's structural frame. It features several vertical columns and horizontal beams. The slabs are shown at different heights, indicating a multi-level structure. Red arrows point from the text boxes to specific areas of the frame where columns meet beams and slabs.

Do these columns need to be divided where slabs connect at different levels?

Will eliminate these beams and connect wall panels to slabs as discussed